Falck Healthcare appoints new managing director

Anette Damgaard is appointed new managing director of Falck Healthcare. She assumes the new responsibilities in addition to her current role as head of Falck Healthcare in Denmark. Anette will report to Falck Healthcare's board of directors.

Chairman of the board of directors of Falck Healthcare and CEO of Falck, Jakob Riis, says:

“Since joining Falck in February this year, Anette Damgaard has diligently worked to turn around our Danish healthcare business. It is still challenged but today we have clarity of the issues and a strong plan to sustain and improve Falck Healthcare in Denmark.”

“In the Nordics, we provide healthcare programmes covering more than 3 million people. Our business is based on the strength of our individual entities in Sweden, Denmark and Norway but over time, we do see synergies in integrating our businesses more. Anette Damgaard and her Nordic management team will unfold this potential to ensure our Nordic leadership and to continue developing a business that delivers great value to its customers, best-in-class treatments to clients and is a great place to work.”

High standards

Over recent years, Anette Damgaard has worked with Falck Healthcare as a customer and provider. Prior to joining Falck in February, Anette Damgaard has been director of Danish private hospital Mølholm, director of law and health with the pension companies PFA and Skandia as well as head of healthcare politics with the Danish Chamber of Commerce.

Anette Damgaard says:

“Falck Healthcare has played a crucial role in developing the high standards for employee healthcare programmes in the Nordics. Our strong market position reflects that. From here, we need to sustain and continuously strengthen a business that supplements the public health care systems, and continue the data driven development of fast and measured interventions for work-related health problems.”

Anette Damgaard takes on her new responsibility as of today.

About Falck Healthcare
